

EDUCATION, POLITICS, AND PUBLIC LIFE

Series Editors:

Henry A. Giroux, McMaster University
Susan Searls Giroux, McMaster University

Within the last three decades, education as a political, moral, and ideological practice has become central to rethinking not only the role of public and higher education, but also the emergence of pedagogical sites outside of the schools—which include but are not limited to the Internet, television, film, magazines, and the media of print culture. Education as both a form of schooling and public pedagogy reaches into every aspect of political, economic, and social life. What is particularly important in this highly interdisciplinary and politically nuanced view of education are a number of issues that now connect learning to social change, the operations of democratic public life, and the formation of critically engaged individual and social agents. At the center of this series will be questions regarding what young people, adults, academics, artists, and cultural workers need to know to be able to live in an inclusive and just democracy and what it would mean to develop institutional capacities to reintroduce politics and public commitment into everyday life. Books in this series aim to play a vital role in rethinking the entire project of the related themes of politics, democratic struggles, and critical education within the global public sphere.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

Any piece of academic or creative work is built upon a foundation of relationships and support, and this one is no exception. I have been fortunate enough to be surrounded, at all stages of development of this work, by friends, family, and colleagues who have given me the resources, feedback, and words of wisdom that have allowed me to proceed. The original dissertation upon which this book is based was nurtured through from inception to completion under the thoughtful and insightful guidance of my doctoral supervisor, Jo-Anne Dillabough, to whom I owe more than she will ever know. Her keen theoretical mind, her deep commitment to truth and justice, and her outstanding mentoring skills permeate the book from start to finish. Mona Gleason and Deirdre Kelly were also essential to the successful completion of that original project, and their feedback and support continue to shine through in this final book version of the work. Kari Dehli, Kathleen Gallagher, and Roger Simon were pivotal in providing me with academic community and research space during the fieldwork period in Toronto. Without you all, this project would never have happened.

More recently, I have benefited tremendously from the institutional support of Diane Reay, my postdoctoral supervisor at the University of Cambridge, and Peter Gose, chair of the Department of Sociology and Anthropology at Carleton University, where I currently work. They each permitted me the space and facilities that allowed me to convert the original dissertation into its final book form. Susan Valentine, Stuart Poyntz, Bernhard Leistle, Jen Pylypa, Justin Paulson, Xiaobei Chen, and Augustine Park all played key roles at various points in the manuscript's development, through feedback on early chapters and the draft prospectus. I owe a big debt of gratitude to Susan Searles Giroux, who first encouraged me to submit my prospectus to Palgrave, and a further debt to her and Henry Giroux for including this book within their series. Deep thanks to my cheerful and indomitable editor at Palgrave, Burke Gerstenschlager, who stood by me and cheered me on from the sidelines during the final few months before the deadline, as circumstances threw barrier after barrier in my path. Likewise to the two editorial assistants with whom I had the pleasure to work, Samantha Hasey and Kaylan Connally, who helped sort through the final nitty-gritty of bringing this project to completion. I owe a huge debt to Karen Tucker, who literally became my left arm in order to complete the manuscript (almost to deadline), and Marlene Brancato and all of the other administrative staff in the Department of Sociology and Anthropology at Carleton University, who worked tirelessly to get me the support I needed when life was getting in the way.

Revised versions of sections of this book have previously appeared or are soon to be published elsewhere as journal articles. These are:

I also wish to acknowledge the support of the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council of Canada (SSHRC), from whom I received a doctoral scholarship and a postdoctoral fellowship, both of which provided the financial backing that permitted this work to reach fruition. Likewise, a Killam predoctoral fellowship was integral to supporting this work, as were research and travel grants provided by the University of British Columbia's Faculties of Graduate Studies and Education.

On a more personal note, I wish to acknowledge my parents, the pillars of endurance who have seen me through all of life's ups and downs: Barbara Kennelly, Lawrence Cornett, and Kenneth Arenson. I am also grateful to my former spouse, Cuc Duong, who was by my side for most of this project. Though our paths are diverging, I am thankful that she remains a part of my life, as coparent and friend.

Finally, my greatest debt of gratitude is owed to the youth participants themselves, those incredibly inspiring, creative, and energetic individuals who generously shared with me their thoughts, their experiences, and their lives. I hope this work proves useful to them and to others like them who are working hard to make the world a better place.
